WE STAND TOGETHER

We in New British Union believe in the 'Special relationship' between Britain and the USA, unlike the left who do everything they can to undermine it. We have Robert Clayton an NBU Officer in America who is doing sterling work raising funds and spreading the word across the pond. We have also forged links with fellow fascist and nationalist organisations especially with Seth Tryssen the leader of the old American Fascist Party. This issue features articles from our American friend.

Comrade,

Well, I don't know how you manage it, but Blackshirt just seems to get better all the time. Congrats, especially, on the statements regarding community involvement vs. the occasional "march" or demonstration. Like you, we encountered a number of perfectly good people who actually agreed with us, but were frightened of being associated with the "F word." I don't blame them, they've had about 80 years of "evil Fascist" propaganda pounded into their heads, at every turn. One who started out like that, was publisher Glenn Jacobs of Arizona. He was quite leery, but agreed to let me write a column for his newspaper. It wasn't long before he was downright enthusiastic, and was writing some damn good Fascist treatises, himself. His paper closed down and he disappeared, rather mysteriously. Yet, we know this course to be correct. There are a zillion mini-parties, in the UK and here, with unremarkable names, which no one ever heard of, for the most part. Lincoln Rockwell had the right idea, in that respect at least; his "American Nazi Party" had all of six or seven guys when it started, but wow, did he get the spotlight. We discussed this during the initial formation of the AFP; and decided that rather than be the "American Patriot Party" or some such, we'd be honest, and tell it like it is. As Mosley said to Lord Rothermere (in the Jonathan Cake movie, at least) "Fascism isn't just a word; it is the creed which will rebuild this nation." (Or pretty close to that, it's been a while since I've seen it.)

Stay the course, my friend, stay the course. Oh, and the new HQ looks terrific!

NBU AMERICAN OFFICER

My name is Robert Clayton. I am an American, and live in New York. I first became interested in British fascism as a teenager, when I was fortunate enough to see a televised interview of Sir Oswald Mosley. Today, NBU is the successor to Mosley's BUF. I believe that Americans of European ancestry should help defend Europe and Western Civilization. I joined NBU two years ago because I wanted to stand with Britain. The Brexit vote was a great victory. The political turnaround in Europe since then has been amazing. Europeans are rejecting globalism. Fascist, nationalist and right-wing populist movements are growing across Europe. Right-wing governments have been elected in some countries. Those countries are opposing the EU and refusing to take any more migrants, choosing instead to preserve their ethnic and national identities. We are witnessing the greatest socio-political change in Europe since the fall of communism. A new world order is rising, and we are a part of it.

Once again we see the headlines declaring Nazis on the loose shock horror!

The left have used this tactic for decades to discredit any party or movement that hold a different political view to themselves. The mass of people now have a pavlovian response to the very word. The fact is that the term was used to describe members of the National Socialist German Workers Party which ceased to exist 70 years ago, to be a Nazi one would need to be 1, a national Socialist 2, a German and 3, Be living in Europe pre 1945. As we are not any of these labeling us Nazi is at least mis-leading at worse a plain old fashioned lie. We are British Fascists following the creed of Sir Oswald Mosley that was based on Italian Fascist syndacantism. We have an absolute right to take our message to the people and we will defend freedom of speech against the anti british anti democratic elements that wish to deny the people the chance to hear what we have to say.

May's Cabinet reshuffle

It has been suggested that in her Cabinet reshuffle, Prime Minister Theresa May has weeded out the "pale, male and stale" political talent from the Conservative frontline so there will not be so many white men over 50.

If that reference had been to "pale, female and stale" it would have been pounced upon by the politically correct forces as racist, sexist and ageist. However, the fact that it was an insulting swipe at white men who are getting on a bit seems to have made it all right.

For young political talent to be picked before those with experiercer, ability and suitability could lead to disaster.

So-called positive discrimination means even the most exceptional talent can be ignored on the grounds of ethnicity, how old you are and gender.

A recent Daily Mail headline read in capitals, "Massacre of the Middle Aged Men".

When I first took it from my door without my glasses on, I thought that Islamic terrorists had struck again. After putting my glasses on I saw it was referring to Mrs May's Cabinet reshuffle.

No need for such headlines in this day and age.

A Brief History Of The AMERICAN FASCIST PARTY

By Seth Tyrssen

“Time counts, and keeps on counting,” as they said in one of the “Mad Max” movies; so, with the passage of time, I must admit, I draw on memories that are not all-inclusive. But at the request of NBU Leader Gary Raikes, I’m happy to include this brief history.

For my own part, I freely admit to having been a National Socialist since my early teen years -- a fact which did not thrill my parents, but they tolerated me anyway. I’d organized “blackshirts” in my Junior High School, which they weren’t too crazy about either. By 1978, I had stood shoulder-to-shoulder with NSM Detroit Capt. Bill Russell on many occasions, against the Reds. During this time I met NSP leader Frank Collin, at a time when rumors were going around that he was actually Jewish -- something that was perfectly obvious to me, though I rather liked Frank at the time; and NSM chief writer James Mason, who was so terrified on the approach of the Reds when he was visiting one weekend, that he had to be driven back to Ohio.

In 1978, the Democratic National Convention was to be held in Detroit; and the mayor clearly didn’t want any problems from us. Bill Russell went to jail briefly on some feeble trumped-up charge, and the FBI was sent to my inner-city house to poison me. This they did by spraying something very much like Agent Orange into a pair of work gloves I regularly used outdoors. As a result, the skin of my hands was swollen and burning off, a layer at a time, over the next two years. This didn’t prevent Bill and I from showing up at a City Council meeting a bit later, facing down a mob of about 300 howling Reds from the Revolutionary Communist Party. (That incident is recounted both in “The New Fascism” and “Life By Misadventure: Diary of an American Fascist.”)

THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST

Eventually, I was forced to retreat to my parents' new home in New Jersey, to see a string of doctors and gradually get myself on the road to recovery. This hiatus gave me ample opportunity to look back, and examine my own views more closely. And I came to the conclusion that I was no longer a National Socialist. About half the people I'd met were perfectly good chaps, and half were stark, raving bonkers.

I could see that "the movement" wasn't moving anywhere; and most involved thought of themselves as some high-ranking figure in their vision of an America under National Socialism. If you think of yourself in a more common occupation, the whole thing becomes a lot less attractive. Too, I had met many people of other races that were perfectly decent folks -- contrary to the stereotyping I'd had pushed at me for decades.

So ... what was I?

After spending some considerable time in both thought and study, I realized that I was a Fascist, in the spirit of the great Sir Oswald Mosley. I thought I was probably the only one. Years later, when I got dragged kicking and screaming into the computer age, I found that this wasn't necessarily the case. I stumbled across a Yahoo site called "American Fascist Party," but it had apparently been created and then abandoned; there was no moderator, no one in charge, nothing.

But I did meet up with a damn good bunch of people, all asking "is anyone in charge, here?" It was decided that, just by virtue of seniority and experience, that I should lead the AFP. From this group, I was able to assemble an excellent officer corps. But we were plagued by a few half-wit "neo-Nazis" that insisted on posting, and with no control over that site, we couldn't get rid of them. So en masse, we left that particular site, and created our own. Things were still largely informal, but we assembled (on paper at least) a Fascist Institute of Technology, an Iron Guard (our Blackshirts,) a Youth Corps, and various ministries.

Things got serious when, on the night of George Bush's ("King George I") illegal invasion of Iraq, I sent him a message, promising the American Fascist Party's complete and total opposition.

THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST

This, of course, attracted the attention of the FBI once again. By this time I was living in a country home in Georgia -- I'd had enough snow and ice. It was obvious that my phone was tapped, and it remains so to this day; nor do I care. They took to calling at regular hours, and saying nothing. This was supposed to scare me. Instead, I made a little tape recording of the opening to the old radio show, "The Shadow," and when the phone rang promptly at 7:30 PM, I'd hit the button and they'd hear "who knows ... what evil ... lurks in the hearts of men? The Shadow knows, heh heh heh!"

With officers in numerous states, and connections with groups and individuals throughout America and abroad (including Spain and Japan,) we had a presence which far outweighed our actual numbers.

As mentioned earlier, I was fortunate in having an excellent officer corps; in particular, Deputy Leader Stuart Young and Minister of Information Mike Cessna. Both wrote reams of excellent material which was posted on our site.

During this time, "The New Fascism" was written, and membership grew. Even now, when I re-read that book, I see nothing I'd really change, even after almost 13 years.

THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST

I was also writing a regular column for the Arizona newspaper, "Apache County Reporter." Its publisher had originally been leery of the "F word," but by the time the paper folded, he was writing some excellent Fascist material himself.

In 2004, I was a candidate for the presidential race; though I always freely admitted, in our case it was more of a slow walk. We were just there to help spread the word. Even so, the night of the election, I got calls from all over the country from folks saying "hey man, I voted for ya!"

Clearly, it was time for an organizational conference. The "Fascist Executive" was to have been held in Texas in 2005.

Unfortunately, in spite of an enthusiastic following on-line, not enough people could manage to attend. Thus did I learn, you can't build a real movement on a computer. We never did establish the street presence that's needed, and in that respect, the NBU has gone much farther than we did. A later meeting in New York City took place, between myself, Dan Gustin (leader of our "sister organization," the American Fascist Movement) and a British comrade who always wished to remain anonymous but influential. As seen here. Not sure he's even still alive, he was none too well when we last spoke -- and that was over two years ago.

PART 2

By Seth Tyrssen

Now, I know full well that there is nothing more boring than listening to some geezer drone on and on with a litany of his health problems. Alas, I must inflict a bit of that on you, here -- because a certain amount of it can be blamed squarely on the FBI, and will explain why I hate them so very thoroughly.

I mentioned in the last article that they'd sent their dirty tricks squad over, to poison me. How did I know this, you may well ask? Simple: they were seen.

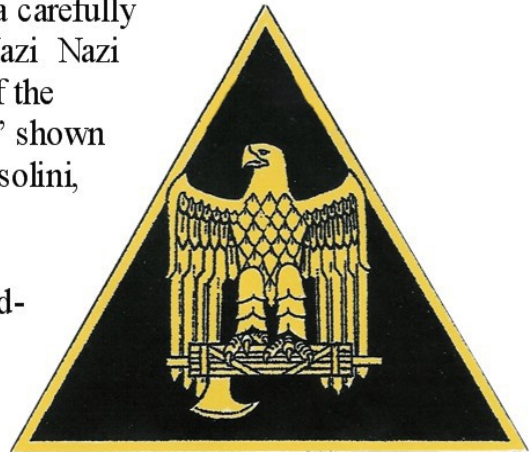

It never occurred to them that a National Socialist (which I was, at the time) living in a primarily Black neighborhood would get along well with his neighbors, but I did. And when my skin troubles began, my neighbor across the street (a prominent Black Muslim, back in the days when Islam was less odious) told me that he'd seen a squeaky-clean "telephone company" pull up to the house while I was at work. Two squeaky-clean "repairmen" got out, with their perfectly clean uniforms and carefully ironed pants with creases -- this is an FBI trademark. They entered my house, and emerged about a half hour later. They sprayed something akin to the notorious "Agent Orange" into a pair of work gloves I always used outdoors, and thus began years of Hellish nightmare. Skin swelled, burned off a layer at a time, and itched beyond belief; it was rather like having both hands stuck in jars of hungry mosquitos, 24/7, for two years.

I saw more doctors than I can count or remember. Most were puzzled. Some had a look of outright fear; they knew what the real deal was. But only one finally had the courage to say "someone's been fucking with you," and prescribed heavy doses of the steroid prednisone. It worked -- but at a cost.

THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST

The cure was not instantaneous by any means, and though the worst of it was over in two years, I had to go back on prednisone for about the next decade. And this resulted in avascular necrosis, which to us laymen means that the bones are rotting away from the inside-out.

My street-action days were over, but the fiery spirit remained. “That which does not kill me, only makes me stronger.” I never liked “keyboard commandos,” but if that’s all I could do, then by damn, that’s what I’d do. Which, as recounted in the previous article, is what led to the formation of the AFP. We eschewed the usual “uniform fetish” trip, to avoid looking like all the costume Nazis. We even eschewed armbands, since they usually evoke a carefully programmed response from the masses: “Nazi Nazi Nazi,” or “that guy looks like something out of the 1930’s.” Instead, we went with the “tri-patch,” shown at right; it loosely resembles one worn by Mussolini, but the masses don’t know that.

The “fencing shirt” gave way to the more modern black pullover “turtleneck,” with a fasces pin on the front (thanks to our “sister organization,” the AFM.)

We could, therefore, walk around in public without really drawing any notice or disapproving glances (or outright physical attacks.) We forbade “jackboots,” though I strongly suspect we all had a pair, and “Sam Browne” belts, both of which might be worn in private now and then. (Below right: guilty as charged, yer honor!)

Considering that we had just over a hundred members scattered around, we actually did pretty well. We had contacts around the world, and powerful enemies -- both indicators that you’re doing something right.

Perhaps the most useful thing we did was to pin down what modern Fascism actually is, and what it wanted to accomplish in the modern age. We could back up our rather radical approach with the bedrock of original Fascist philosophy, from both Mosley and Mussolini.

THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST

Even the Duce's grand-daughter, Euro MP Alessandra Mussolini, was nice to us.

Those radical and more modern policies included being open to any American citizen, of any race or religion, that agreed with us. Consequently we had people from many walks of life, and one of my best and most loyal officers was a proud Hispanic gentleman whom I still keep in touch with.

The issue of "gays" was admittedly a touchy one. We had exactly one gay member, and he served well. After some discussion, we decided that Mosley's dictum "in public life, service ; in private life, liberty" was the way to go. The guy was a good sound engineer, and re-mastered a number of Mosley speeches, which we offered on CD. But tiring of the controversy, he left shortly thereafter.

Gun laws are different here. The holster was a gift from a Comrade.

Such radical policies horrified the closet Nazis and the Puritans-in-Blackshirts, both here and abroad. One group in Italy, and one prominent individual in England, starting raving against us. And at that point, I quit, saying that the barrage of insult from our enemies was of no importance, but getting that from those who were supposed to be friends and allies, was more than I wanted to deal with. I was effectively burnt out.

Others tried to carry on; the second administration had no more luck than I'd had, in getting a proper meeting together.

The third was to be led by my former Minister of Defense, but he came back from active duty in "the sandbox" so screwed up with PTSD, that there was just no way he could take on leadership of a very public, very radical group. Disaffected, the membership faded away, and that was the quiet end of the AFP.

Or was it?

Now, barely over a decade later, we live in an age where rapefugees swarm over Europe, and people in America are getting damn sick of the Libtard way of running things. "If it looks like a rich RepubliCrat, don't vote for it!" So who knows, if there are any younger and fitter chaps out there with the serious cajones to get out there in the streets and make it a reality, in spite of the dangers, the AFP may see a revival. Any number of "tin fuhrers" have come and gone; it will take someone with real personal courage and real intelligence to make it work. Hopefully they'll have read and understood "the Good Book," as I often call The New Fascism. We shall see ... We shall see. --ST

THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST

It is important that we all try to appreciate the reality, that movements such as ours will always struggle at the ballot box. History has taught us this. Even the great aspiring statesmen, like Sir Oswald Mosley, or John Tyndall, struggled to stand the masses to attention long enough to have them drag themselves to the polling booths. And our 'democracy' is so skewed toward protecting vested interests - the Duopoly of Tory and the fake Labour party, the City, the culture-destroying 'progressives' who have an echoing voice in every degenerate BBC presenter, and feeble-minded fake 'Conservatives'. The whole news-cycle in our nation is dominated by so-called journalists, who fawn and speculate over petty political power-plays, and the performance of foreign money markets, to name a few of the daily distractions. None of these issues are tangible for the real men of our society, nor do they reflect the real problems affecting our national life. Is it then, any wonder, that 60-70% of people do not vote at all?

The 'Quiet Revolution' , as put forth by NBU Leader Gary Raikes, is a political concept based on a philosophy of covert action. The action is true, grassroots style politics - fostering change nationwide, from the local level. The fundamental application of this philosophy is the induction of true British nationalists in all forms and level of local government. We at the NBU have recognised that obtaining appointment to parish and community councils is both a symbolic, and practically necessary starting point, in the pursuit of this philosophy of action. To have a decisive influence in the unglamorous service of the community, is every bit as important as managing public affairs in the highest political offices, for the simple reason that our state apparatuses are failing the nation if even one community is abandoned to degradation.

The NBU is a young movement, yet already has a handful of parish councillors, and one county councillor we also have a number of our people about to take up seats on Scottish community councils. These patriots do not enter into their public service as grand-standers, making an ostentatious show of their political allegiance. These individuals enter as independents, true patriots who want to give nationalists a voice where it is most needed, while serving their communities. I am seeking appointment to my local community council. I will be proud to participate in such matters as local planning permission. I will be proud to bring the best interests of my community to the attention of local public and private services. I will take pride in these seemingly modest endeavours, because I am filled with a great desire to serve my people as are my fellow Blackshirts. Patriotism is best expressed through passionate service to the community. Not through pointless demonstrations and confrontational marches. If fellow nationalists will similarly express their patriotism, and at the same time pursue a closer unity of our movements, we can in time influence public institutions and public life in a manner which will endure. In time, hundreds of nationalists, embracing this philosophy of action, and standing independently within parish and local councils, can declare en masse their unity to one party, one nation, one leader . And thus from such humble endeavours, our cause can be represented in parliament by the finest patriots. Fellow patriots, I am not a politician. I have no desire to seek self-egrandisement at the expense of my country men. NBU- People not politicians is more than just a slogan. From my elders, I have learned enough of the history of the British nationalist movements, to understand that we have been let down by seemingly endless internal strife a lack of leadership, real vision and discipline.

A Few Thoughts On "TALKIN' THE TALK"

By Seth Tyrssen

This is probably geared more towards those who are representing the NBU out there, in public; but for each and every one of the folks who are doing so, it's actually important.

We all know the expression "walk the talk," which means, have the courage of your convictions, and "put your money where your mouth is." But I'd like to diverge a bit here, and focus on "talking the talk."

I recently received an email from a prominent nationalist, who was unimpressed with the speaker he heard, from a certain group, because that speaker not only couldn't answer the question, "what is your policy on repatriation?", he didn't even know what the word meant.

No, I won't name names; it could be anybody, anywhere, from any group. The same lesson holds true: HOW YOU PRESENT YOURSELF is going to be the main impression the public takes away, regarding your group and its views.

If you're dull, not very animated, and speak in a monotone, no one is going to be impressed. You don't have to be a fiery screamer; in fact, that's a major turn-off to most people, as well. Not all of us can be the gripping speaker that Sir Oswald Mosley was; but we can all learn from his example!

Every single public representative should get some training in public speaking. My personal favorite came naturally to me; I'd been on stage since I was a kid, and later, did a few movies as well. (Nope, no starring roles, sorry.) In all those years, however, I learned quite a bit about presenting myself. For those still in school, take some acting classes. Participate in the school plays. Join the debate club, if such things still exist. And dash it all, if you're going to represent Britain, learn English. Yes I know, that sounds odd; of course you "know" English. I mean expand your vocabulary. There's no reason you shouldn't know what a word like "repatriation" means.

THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST – THE FUTURE IS FASCIST

There have been a few -- just a few -- really great speakers that I can think of. Certainly, Adolf Hitler comes to mind; he was the greatest showman of the 20th century, in spite of a voice made raspy by mustard gas in WW1. His timing, his inflection, his careful use of gesture, all combined to make him the foremost speaker of his time. If you just look at what he's actually saying, lots of it is pretty banal and ordinary. It was the way he said it.

John F. Kennedy, Winston Churchill, Martin Luther King, and Franklin D. Roosevelt were attention-getting speakers -- mostly because of their unique vocal qualities. Even if you were only listening to them on a radio, they got your attention. And of course, Benito Mussolini had his own inimitable style, which resonated with his audiences.

You have a voice; learn to use it. You have a body; learn to use it. Study the great speakers of the past (no matter which side of the philosophical fence they may be on. Lenin, it is said, was a lousy speaker!)

Of them all, Sir Oswald offers the best example I can think of. He connected with his audience, he was engaged, not standing up there like some separate and superior demagogue. Watch him. Pay less attention to what's being said, and more to the way it's being said.

Practice in front of a mirror, if possible. Yes, you'll feel silly. So what? You'll soon get a feel for what works, or doesn't work, for you. No, there's no point in trying to be a copy of anybody. An audience will see that, and blow it off, immediately. But if you work hard at making your presentation as great as your message ... it will be. ---ST

LEADERS ARTICLE

I find it increasingly difficult to understand why 'workers' continue to support the Labour party, a movement which has clearly demonstrated not merely its unwillingness, but its inability to tackle the problems of the modern age. Perhaps their members look back to the period of ardent enthusiasm and eager spirit, or, as young members they are stirred by a desire to change the conditions of society, or merely a desire to fight against what has been represented to be "this brutal alien creed of Fascism."

If you are a true Briton you will do what every true Briton claims to do, study both sides of the question. that is all we ask of you. Study our case. Pull it to pieces if you can. Compare it with the case of your own movement and then study the record of your movement.

Compare the old revolutionary ardour of the early Labour Party with its bourgeois complaisance of today. Compare the sacrifices of its earlier leaders with the smugness and self satisfaction of the Labour MP's who can vote for an extra £1000 per year for themselves while the people still suffer from wage cuts and attacks made on the Labour movement and its supporters by the media in the early years with the support now given by the same people and the adulation now showered upon it from the likes of the BBC.

The Labour Party was a party of promise, today it is merely a party of false promise. The Labour Party led us to the hell of multiculturalism and failed mass immigration, the invasions of sovereign countries and the mass killing of innocent Muslims and here at home economic depression.

To excuse themselves by saying that the Labour Government were faced with the repercussions of a world depression is to evade the issue. Socialists should know that under modern conditions the slump always follows the boom. Is it not strange that your leaders can always with such great assurance prophesy economic break down in other countries should have been incapable of foreseeing it in their own? Or, is it true as the late John Wheatey remarked when asked if he thought the leaders of the Labour Party were sincere, "They sincerely want good jobs and will make any sacrifice to hang on to them".

The Labour Party was once of sturdy, virile youth, today it is in the last stages of senile decay. If labour supporters could present us with a better and finer argument than British Fascism we would advise workers to keep supporting them, that is our duty. but the labour movement acknowledges its failure to beat our argument when it resorts to the silly methods of misrepresentation and physical violence.

One last suggestion, as a Labour supporter you should buy the leading Tory newspaper to get real and true labour news. The idea is ridiculous isnt it? But are you not doing that when you want to learn about Fascism? Do you not rely on anti-Fascist newspapers etc for information about our movement? I ask you to study our case, not what passes for our case in the organs of our opponents. Visit our website and check out where we stand, policies etc for yourselves.
